NOT SUCH A MODEL OF A GOOD HUSBAND AFTER ALL.

BY PETER PEPPERCORN, ESQ.

Doubtless most of our readers have heard a story intended to illustrate the difference between a man's attentions to his wife during the honey-month, and that of a later period, namely: that a certain individual had commenced his matrimonial career by dutifully fastening all the hooks and eyes on his charmer's dress each morning, and after a while failing one short, then another, gradually slide down the scale of increasing indifference, until he had fairly ended in refusing to attend to them at all.

Well, the story is excellent y well so far as it goes, but we have an id a that we can relate a little anecdote bearing on the same point, the main circumstances of which actually occurred some few years ago, in a certain village we wot of, that will 'knock it all into a cocked hat,' as the saying goes—at any rate we will make the attempt, and leave the reader to judge.

In a locality lying between Maine and Texas, there stands a very steep and lofty hill, on the top of which a very pretty village has been built, numbering some forty or fifty dwellings, and which we shall call Springdale.

At the lowest base of this hill, gushing from the crevice of a rock, a stream of pure, crystal water flows unceasingly, from whence to the village rises a continuous succession of steps cut in the ground for the purpose of giving a convenient passage to the inhabitants in their daily visits to the spring.

With a pail of water to carry, of course the ascent is very toilsome, and had it not been for the superior excellence of the water, only thus to obtained, over all that could be gotten with less of fatigue, it is probable that but few would ever have gone to the trouble of fetching it.

But the water of that identical spring being so very cool and good, the villagers without exception, had used none other within the memory of the oldest settler, and might daily be seen trudging up and down the aforesaid steep declivity, bearing tins and buckets filled, or to be filled, from the favorite fountain.

Now, even as mercury, by its rise and fall, will denote a change in the weather, so might this spring have been taken as a sort of matrimonial barometer, to tell the state of man's affection towards his wife and in attention to her comforts. There was one eccentric personage, and most inveterate bachelor—one Jacob Crowl, whose dwelling stood immediately adjoining the upper steps leading from the spring—thus giving him unlimited advantages for taking accurate observations, he was often heard to make the assertion that he could tell whether any villager had been married under or over a given time hereof, from the sight he had long since found as being inseparably connected with a visit to the fountain, and not only the visit but that he could speak to the exact amount of the same individual's affectionate ardor toward his wife, by a like infallible process.

The one exception being the case of a man who had injured a girl, and being compelled by her friends to repair the effects of his conduct by marrying her, it course it could not be expected that he would show any undue affection even at the first, either by fetching the water or in any other way.

Secondly that the self-same husband had invariably with one single exception, eventually come to consider their voluntary task to the spring, a perfect bore, and dodging behind the old established cloak for married men especially provided—tired with a hard day's work therefore, not to be bothered with household matters, which clearly belonged to the female department'—gradually, but surely, began to shift the water privileges from their own broad shoulders to those of their wives until the latter in the end had to tend to the matter entirely themselves.

Some accomplished the change within a month—others stuck it out during a whole three, and one or two had actually made out to go the loving and dutiful husband up to the close of the first half year.

As was very natural, the wives of Springdale took it very hard that they should be thus compelled to trip up and down the steep hill, while their loving husbands sat smoking in indolent comfort at home, during the long evenings, impervious to all the taunts or coaxing intreaties that could be levelled against them.

They said it was a shame (as indeed it was) as well as a sin, crying about for immediate alternation, that a poor, weak constitute woman should be compelled to sink under a heavy load up the steep hill, while great beafy fellows took house and hours of idle ease in the big arm chair—and the latter retort by saying, 'Oh, bother it!' and spread out their shoulders and feet with more ease and comfort than they did before.

At length one bright example arose in their midst, like some shining luminary, standing forth as a beacon light for the guidance of all beholders—one husband who promised to prove the possibility of affection for a wife so standing the test of time that it tomorrow would only be the counterpart of to day, even to the latest period of his married existence. One loving husband, a Mr. Jones, and the one alluded to as the latter of the two exceptions above, actually continued to carry all the water required by his wife from the spring, when two months beyond the heretofore longest term—a half year—had expired, and as yet showed not the slightest sign of any intention to alter the arrangement. Really, what a treasure of a husband he was, and how fond his pretty little wife must be of him to be sure. Thus thought and spoke the rest of the married ladies, as they daily continued to note Mr. Jones' dutiful visits to the spring. And did'nt they taunt their own husbands, and ask them if they weren't ashamed to be outdone in affectionate regard for their wive's comfort by Mr. Jones. And didn't the husbands retort by the sneering reply, that if Mr. Jones was soft enough to be a fodolly-boy for his wife, it was no rule that they should be, not by a long shot, and that if their wives supposed that they were going to be wheedled into any such nonsense as fetching water from the spring merely because Mr. Jones, or any other Jones, was green enough to do it, they would find themselves much mistaken, sure.'

Two more months rolled by, and still Mr. Jones persevered in his dutiful task, or had his wife been once seen to carry so much as a single pailfull from the low down fountain. Positively he was a very model of affectionate husbands, and a certain Mrs. Primble, who had chanced to marry a 'monthly' husband, finally suggested that Mr. Jones certainly deserved to receive the thanks of all the married ladies of the village, as a token from them that his praiseworthy acknowledgment as proven by his conduct, of the just rights of the weaker sex, were fully appreciated by all whose good opinion was most worth having.

This suggestion met with such decided approbation, that a tea drinking frolic on a large scale was covered forthwith, for the purpose of taking the sense of the ladies assembled on that occasion, and passing suitable resolutions to accompany the vote of thanks proposed.

The meeting was numerously attended, and deliberations duly carried on under the inspiring influence of the best 'imperial'—Mrs. Primble being unanimously elected to preside over the ——teapot. The speaking was very enthusiastic—each lady talking as long as she felt disposed, (the one hour rule not being recognized,) and altogether a day only was a very pretty a dress drafted out, but it was also resolved that each lady should subscribe a certain sum, the entire amount to be invested in the purchase of a silver pitcher, to be engrabbed with a suitable inscription, setting forth the why and the wherefore of its being presented—namely attaching this provision, that the presentation should be deferred to the end of a year from the date of Mr. Jones' marriage and the matter in the meantime be kept a profound secret from all but themselves.

The time arrived, and as Mr. Jones had still adhered to his task of carrying water from the spring, he had fairly earned the pitcher, and Mrs Primble having been delegated to present it in due form, accompanied by the vote of thanks she entered his presence with a proud step and smiling countenance, and fairly carried out her charge.

'Dear! dear! what a beautiful idea,' exclaimed the voice of Mrs. Jones, at this juncture, advancing her laughing face through an adjoining door-way, a little beyond which she had been an amused spectator of the foregoing scene. 'Ah! Mrs Primble, if you only knew what I know, how bad you would feel, to be sure.'

Feel bad? cried Mrs. Primble, beginning to feel bad already, if her countenance might be taken as an index of her feelings, and at the same time Mr. Jones began to perpetrate divers earnest telegraphic signals towards his wife, as wishing to prevent her from saying something that might be disagreeable for him to hear.

No, no! cried the latter, in a laughing, mocking voice—you needn't want to hush me up, Jones: I'm determined to let Mrs. Primble know how exquisitely herself and friends have been taken in by outside appearances. Ha, ha, I wouldn't miss the treat of telling the joke for the world.'

Mr. Jones now grabbled the pitcher, and suddenly left the room, and Mrs. Primble looking no matter what was the real state of her feelings, very bad indeed, said: For goodness' sake, tell me what you mean. How have we been taken in by outside appearances?

Oh you shall hear, Mrs. Primble, and I'll wager any thing that you will acknowledge yourself that you have been as prettily and completely deceived as was well possible for you to be. You gave Jones that pitcher for being such an affectionate husband, as to fetch all the water from the spring for me, as opposed to those who have left that tiresome task for their wives.

Yes that is what I did, and the reasons why I did so are correctly told. Well—is it not true that he has done so?

Yes.

Well.

Oh, Mrs. Primble, but if you only had any idea of the price I have had to pay for his having so acted. Dear, dear, how bad you would feel. And off she burst into another fit of laughter, which sounded like anything than the music it really was, to the ears of Mrs. Primble.

Price! ejaculated the latter, price you have had to pay for him doing nothing but what was his bounden duty to do?

Precisely, my dear Mrs. Primble. But I'll let you into the mysterious secret of Jones' apparent goodness. Now listen. In less—less, mind you—than a month after our marriage Mr. Jones began to grumble about fetching the water. He said he was too tired of a night, and that he could not spare the time in the morning without encroaching on the hours set apart for his daily business. He said no one else carried water for their wives, and that it ridiculous for him to do so, and he looked upon and laughed at as the hen pecked house band of the village, and finally point blank severed that he would not go for another bucket full. Now you know Mrs. Primble that I am perhaps, the least strongly constituted of any woman in the whole neighborhood; and I felt convinced that if I had to toil up that hill with all the water we should require, some injury to my health would undoubtedly be the consequence. In vain that I stated this to Jones. He was afraid I suppose, of being considered of less manly spirit than the rest, and so would not pay any heed to my expostulations, or alter the resolution he had formed. Happily, I thought of his boots, and knowing that his partiality to a clean pair was only equalled by his repugnance to cleaning them, I offered to polish them once a day, on condition that he would—

And you have cleaned his boots every day for the last eleven months?

Every day, except Sundays: and I have had to clean two pair on Saturdays instead.

Oh! ejaculated Mrs. Primble, fervently, as she threw up her hands and the whites of her eyes simultaneously, and darted from the house, mentally exclaiming, as she hurriedly sped on to tell the harrowing tale to the rest of the ladies, who with herself had been so completely taken in—Clean that great lazy lubber's boots. My soul, how I should like to give him a good cowhiding, and then help to duck him in the river.

The story somehow leaked out, and reached the ears of the done-brown ladies' husbands, and the way they afterwards threw out taunting allusions to that silver pitcher, and begged to know who cleaned the boots of that affectionate husband, was something curious. As for their wives, they were forced to acknowledge that they had been taken in by outside appearances, and that Mr. Jones was not, all things considered, quite such a model of a husband, after all.

THE HUNTRESS

WASHINGTON CITY D. C

SATURDAY MAY 3, ::::1851

GENERAL POST OFFICE.

GEN. JACOBS.

Gen. J. is the successor of Maj. S R. Hobbie, as 1st Assistant Post Master General, and a happy appointment. He is about middle age, and rather tall, wanting little of six feet in height, with a stout manly figure, and a neat graceful form. His gentle air. his easy gestures, and refined language bespeaks a highly cultivated mind, and imparts a striking appearance at first sight. His fine classic head is adorned with a profusion of dark hair, partially grey. His face is of the grecian model, wide at the top and narrowing to the chin. His tranquil forehead is expansive, open, and shows intellect and that imposing modesty of expression which ever accompanies worth. His serene brow—equally balanced between mildness of temper, depth of thought, and equanimity of mind—his bland steady eye of azure, sheds a softened radiance over his amiable benevolent features, and rests upon you with that meek benignity which never fails to inspire esteem and respect. But we never saw so fine a countenance; it yields to none in expression; so mild and suasive, beaming with every blandishment that adorns man. His manners are familiar and artless as nature itself.—He comes from east Tennessee, and was a near neighbor of the amiable Hon Hugh L. White.

The General reminds us of that cool, firm appearance for which the citizens of this noble State were distinguished, before it was over-run with religious and political Quacks—there being but few of the old Jackson school left.

Mr. ANDERSON.

Of this gentleman we can't say at what time he came into the General Post office, last week when we called there was the first time we have seen him since he was a small boy. He is quite young, hardly up to the common standard in height—has a stanch, rather stout figure, combining strength and beauty of form. His face is round, very fair and full, with finely marched features and pleasant countenance, in both of which he resembles his good old grand father of the revolution, Maj. Wheaten. He has light hair, if we do not mistake, and a deep smooth forehead which displays a mild but true grandeur of expression: with a bland azure eye of dovelike innocence, steady as the poles, and bespeaks deep penetration. His tranquil brow is smooth and fair, and denotes an undaunted spirit and an even quiet temper. His countenance is serene as the evening zephyrs, and denotes erudition and benevolence of heart.

This gentleman's grandfather, Maj. Wheaten, was a native of New Jersey, and was attached to the Navy at the commencement of the war—and the first officer (Lieutenant) or private that captured the first British colors taken in the revolution. The young hero fought like a lion, and gained the victory, they were both small vessels, leaving the men of each breathless in the struggle side by side, neither would strike, when the gallant Wheaten foaming with ardor on a sudden sprung upon the deck of the British schooner, tore down the colors and returned to his own vessel in triumph.

Maj. Wheaten died in this city since we lived here. He was a gentleman in every sense of the word, brave as Cæsar, and as generous as a Prince. The young gentleman of whom we have been speaking, has a strong resemblance to him in features and figure.

N. B. MARKLE, ESQ.

Mr. M. is one of our own boys from the West, Terre Haute, the garden-spot of Indiana, for intelligence, wit, and refinement. He is in the bloom of manhood, with a showy gentlemanly appearance, being of the average height, and a figure of inimitable elegance and proportion, with his dazzling dark eye and brilliant countenance, he is quite fascinating. His hair is black, with a silken gloss, rich and profuse. His face is oval, of becoming fulness, and of the middling shade. His forehead is of the average depth, denoting strong mental powers and a facetious disposition. His open and ingenuous brow indicates a benign temper, and is stamped with an unflinching independence. His dark sparkling eye of a deep hazel, beams with vivacity and good nature; while his intelligent countenance and his whole demeanor at once combines the appearance of ability, learning, and the manners of a gentleman.

Mr. ARCHER.

Mr. A. is a native of Virginia, and appertains to one of the oldest and most respectable families of the State. He is quite young, in the full bloom of manhood, with a tall, rather slender figure, and an erect manly form from head to foot. His fine classic head is adorned with beautiful hair of a dark flaxen color, fine and soft as silk, and drops over his temple to shead in witching ringlets. His thin cassius face is oval and fair as a ladies, with regular features of the finest expression in animated existance. His smooth expansive forehead bears the impress of that tenderness and penetration which flows from a warm heart, and a clear head. His modest brow serene, chaste, and studious, is the mirror of composure and an evenly temperament. His blue melting eye—no words can convey an idea of its liquid lustre—so glittering and so benign, the very sunshine of mercy's tenderness; in a word it is the pure essence of all that is virtuous, or kind in the human species. His countenance and manners have a charm peculiar to the Archer family, to whom we have the honor of being related by marriage.

This gentleman is a full cousin of Hon. Wm. S. Archer, late United States Senator from Virginia, and an own brother to the lady of Hon. Jeremiah Morton, the member of Congress from the same State.

Mr. WALLACE.

This gentleman was in the same room with Mr. Archer, and is about his height. He is a resident of Washington, and said he had 'seen us before.' He is in the morning of life, with a pleasing figure and genteel appearance. His face is oval, somewhat dark, with a rich roseate glow, and features of fine symmetry. His deep bland forehead, displays an ingenuous and well-poised comprehensive mind. His facetious brow denotes wit, good humor, and a great flow of spirits. His dark rolling eye of liquid brilliancy, bespeaks a joyous and benevolent heart. His countenance is open, gay and cheerful, and flows with human kindness. In his manners Mr W, is just what he ought to be, affable and artless as unbiased nature itself.

Mr FENDALL.

Mr F, came from Alexandria, a few miles below our city, and is a relative of Lawyer Fendall of this city. He is rather young looking, of good height, but slender; and quite a delicate form. His face is of the grecian contour, rather dark, with very delicate features for a man. His bland oval forehead, composed as the sleeping lake—his radiant brow, meek as Moses. His soft dark eye and gentle countenance, so innocent, and timid, as the fleeting fawn—in short his whole demeanor is alike, stamped with ineffable sweetness, modesty and innocence.

We met with two of our old friends while paying our respects to the strangers—Messrs. Middleton and Whittlesey. We have known Mr. M. several years—he is what is generally called one of your whole soul men. He certainly is one of the most accomplished and fascinating men ever raised in this city.

Mr. Whittlesey is the son of Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, 2d Comptroller of the United States Treasury, a gentleman who has served his country almost since boyhood, in various capacities without blame or stain. The son, therefore, will never disgrace such a father.

Hon. A. H. H. STUART and FAMILY.

On the same day of our visit to the General Post Office, we called upon Hon. A. H. H. S. Secretary of the Interior, at his residence. He has changed but little since he was here in Congress, several years since. He has become stouter, and acquired more harmony of proportion to his towering height which is six feet three inches. His eye is still the same. Who ever has seen the portrait of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, from whom he is descended in a regular line, will perceive a resemblence not only in the countenance, but the eye and the features.

From his talents, probity and physical powers, it would seem that he was very appropriately designed for the office he now holds, and that the office was made for him; it being one of the most arduous and laborious in the government—Moreover, he is so condescending in his manners that all who approach him are received with kindness.

Mrs. STUART,

Nature has been bounteful to his lady as himself—endowed with every charm of person, and every grace of manner that adorns the sex—tall, and finely formed,—her fair oval face, and mild blue eye, so meek and innocent, her modest mien, all bears the impress of an enlightened mind, and the most touching sweetness of countenance. And then there were a half dozen [for ought we know] of young Secretaries galloping over the floor: but the brightest gem amongst the whole was the eldest daughter about thirteen or fourteen perhaps, the image of her mother, and the perfection of human nature. What will she be when grown?

A LYRIC.

By William D. Gallaher.

Oh, bid me not wed him, brother dear,
For ne'er can my love be given,
My hand to the many that greet me here,
But my heart for the one in heaven.

The sky hath the glory of other days
And as brightly the stars burn on,
But vainly among them my vision strays—
For the star it seeks is gone.

The earth is still fair, and its many flowers
Are lovely, and bright, and sweet,
But I miss the one which in life's young hours
Bloom'd ever around my feet.

The eyes I encounter look on me now
As tenderly as of old,
Not a shade has come to a single brow,
Not a tone I hear is cold:

But a light is lost in its early day,
And a form hath ceased to be,
And a voice hath passed from the earth away—
And these were the world to me!

Then bid me not to wed him brother, dear!
For ne'er can my love be given,
My hand to the many that greet me here,
But my heart for the one in heaven.

THE GLOBE,

Congressional, gricultural, and Literary Newspaper.

The Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur, and a Congressional Globe periodically as heretofore embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source what ever may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in science, art, or agriculture. For material the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects will be consulted and it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men at our country.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and appendix, will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess, a year, $5 00

Office No. 1 Lodge Street, rear of Pennsylvania Bank.

It is the design of the proprietors of this paper, by the introduction of new and attractive features, to render it in future more worthy than ever of the favor it has received, and he naturally desires that his enterprise should be aided by all, who desire the prosperity and success of a Literary Journal of elevated character and high moral tone.

Read, examine, and compare, and judge whether the

is not in an eminent degree, just such a paper as will give a zest to social intercourse, and prove in every respect, an unexceptionable Fireside companion.

Besides furnishing choice Literary Articles, from the most approved authors, and an extensive correspondence at Home and Abroad, the current news will be given up to the latest period of the day of publication, and care will be taken to furnish our Agricultural Friends with a store of information, together with accurately prepared statements of the Markets, &c.

It will be our aim to please the tastes of all readers—and we hope to be so successful in our endeavors, as to merit for the Messenger & Gleaner, the acknowledgment, on the part of the reading public, be its not only the CHEAPEST, but the BEST newspaper in the country.

☞ Payment in all cases in advance free of postage.

☞ Bank notes current in the neighborhood of a subscriber's residence will be taken at par, in payment of subscription, no matter whether above or below five dollars in amount.

No paper will be sent for a period beyond the time for which it is paid.

THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST

UNRIVALLED INDUCEMENTS FOR 1850

A MAMMOTH PAPER,

DEVOTED TO MORALITY, PURE LITERATURE, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS, AGRICULTURE, SCIENCE, ART AND AMUSEMENT.

This paper contains from one-fourth to one half more than the generality of two Dollar city weeklies.

The Proprietors of the SATURDAY EVENING POST return their sincere thanks to their friends and the public for the patronage extended to them since the enlargement of their paper, and respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. The belief expressed in their last Prospectus, that the POST is destined to take it stand at the very head of the weekly press is fast becoming realized. The reason of this is in a great degree, to be found in the stand the POST has always taken against the immoral literature of the day. The public have felt, in the language of the North American and United States Gazette, of this city, that "The Post has done much towards correcting the taste of the newspaper reading public."

The proprietors of the Saturday Evening Post, in coming before the public with a new Prospectus, would respectfully solicit attention to what they have done in the past, as a guarantee for their promises of the future. They may safely say that no other paper in America has given to its readers so large and well chosen an amount of all kinds of reading, elegant and useful imaginative and practical, during the last year as the Post. To say nothing of other tales and sketches. what paper has laid before its subscribers during the past year four such novelets as Henery Benson,' 'The child Stealer,' Isabel Denison,' and The Deserted Wife!'

And the proprietors of the Post are determined that if possible the coming year shall be even a more brilliant one than the past. To begin with they have already secured the following original contributions, which will be published, and other choice pictures of life during the coming year:

The Bayou Gounts. A Novelet by Miss Leslie; author of "Mrs, Washington Potts, &c. &c.

The Bride Of An Evening, A Tale Of Western Life A Novelet, by Mrs Southworth, author of "retribution," 'The Deserted Wife,' &c

The Old Astrologer or, The Prophecy Fulfilled, A Novelet by T. S Arthur, author of 'Agnes or the Possessed,' the Child stealer, &c,

The Belle and the Blue, A Novelet by Caroline Lee Hentz, author of "The Mob Cap,' 'Aunt Patty's Scrapbag

TERMS.

The terms to single subscribers are 2,00 dols per annum, in advance, 3,00, if not paid in advance. For five dollars in advance, one copy will be sent three years.

THE GLOBE,

Congressional, gricultural, and Lite ray Newspaper.

The Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur, and a Congressional Globe periodically as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source what ever may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in science, art, or agriculture. For material the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects will be consulted and it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each week during the first four weeks of a session and two or three numbers of each week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and appendix, will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess, a year, $5 00

For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year, 1 00

For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the present session, if subscribed for before the first of January, 1 50

For one coppy of the Appendix during the present session, if subscribed for before the first of January, 1 00

For six copies of either the Congressional Globe or the appendix, or part of both. 5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe or the Appendix after the 10th of January will be $1 50. The original price of one dollar does not pay the expense of the publications in consequence of the great increase of matter published.
